

Patrice Carbaugh

Patrice grew up with a love of nature and has always been fascinated by glass and its magical properties. While living in Montana she bought a kiln and started teaching herself to work with fused glass experimenting with texture, light and the alchemy of combining glass with precious metals to see what develops. Her inspiration comes from the natural world and the many places she has lived and visited. She spent 20 years working with wildlife at the Los Angeles Zoo and, just for fun, went horse trekking in Kenya, Ireland and various parts of the United States.

To fulfill her commitment to wildlife she moved to Massachusetts where she earned an undergraduate degree, then to St. Georges University in Grenada and the University of Edinburgh in Scotland to earn her Doctor of Veterinary Medicine. recently, she studied in Florida to add animal acupuncture to her list of skills. Patrice now resides in New Mexico with her well-traveled cats, Gabriel and Eli, where she continues her life purpose to heal, create, and offer the world her special gifts captured in glass.
